The Ups and Downs of It.

Golfina, Goddess of my song.
Tis thee I worship all day long;
From rosy morn to dewy eve.
Thy verdant shrine I never leave.
No lover to his love so true.
So constant is, as I to you;
Yet, womanlike, you torture me
With feminine inconstancy.

What keener pleasure than to trace. The pure white sphere's aerial race; As briskly rising from the sand, It wings its flight across the strand. Then with a second brassy drive, It travels, like a thing alive; And, with the iron lotted clean, It lies just dead upon the green. The putter gives it one stroke more, Even with "Bogey" holed in 4. What keener pleasure than to trace

Fut, ah! what anguish 'tis to see The ball remaining on the tee; To hear a comforter, like Job. "Blest if he hasn't missed the globe!" To watch the gutty's devious course Into the all-embracing gorse, Or yawning bunker, from whose shade. With countless strokes and niblick's aid. And bitter thoughts, for words too keen, 'Tis laid, at length, upon the green: Then, putting, see the beggar roll, And stop two inches from the hole!

Such are the pleasures and the pains Such are the pleasures and the pains
The golfer, by his labor, gains.
No sailor on the stormy sea
Has more of ups and downs than he.
He learns, through toil and carnest strife,
The true philosophy of life:
And when, at length, the day is done,
And sinks to rest the weary sun,
He sees in dreams, with sleep-closed eyes,
The awful ghost of "Bogey" rise.
